What is voice command on android. Adding voice commands to android app. Custom voice commands. Do android phones have voice command.

Comcast signaled its intent to move further into the smart home market earlier this month when it announced at CES 2018 that 15 million customers currently leasing an Xfinity gateway would soon receive a firmware update to turn it into a smart hub. Now, with the Super Bowl just around the corner, the company has added new voice commands to its recently redesigned X1 voice remote to make your viewing experience during the big game an even better one. The new features aren't exactly specific to the Super Bowl, but Comcast couldn't have picked a better time to roll them out. One of the simpler new commands lets fans adjust their lights based on which team they're rooting for: "Xfinity Home, make lights green" for Philadelphia Eagles fans, or "Xfinity Home, make lights blue" for New England Patriots fans. Another new feature lets you keep an eye out for the pizza guy without ever needing to take your eyes off the game. Saying "Xfinity Home, show me front door camera" will cause a view from your camera to pop up on your screen, meaning you'll only have to get up from the couch when it's actually time to grab the pizza. You can now ask questions like "Xfinity Home, what is the temperature?" via the X1 remote as well. Another example would come after everyone goes home for the night, and you want to check the alarm. All you need to do is ask "Xfinity Home, is the alarm on?" Answers to this and any other of the supported questions will be immediately displayed on your TV. So far, six companies have partnered with Comcast via the X1 voice commands database. As mentioned earlier, Philips Hue lights are supported, as are Caseta/Lutron lights, the Sengled Element Touch light bulb, and GE in-wall and plug-in switches and dimmers. Nest and Zen thermostats are also supported. Comcast plans to add more commands and hardware partners moving forward. If this interests you, but you're not a Comcast customer, be sure to check out our guide to Comcast Xfinity TV to find out everything the service has to offer. Editors' Recommendations For the android code, you'll need to do several things. First, just in the mainactivity class, you need to add two things. The first thing is a SpeechRecognizer and the second thing is a TAG for debugging your app. private SpeechRecognizer sr; private static final String TAG = "MainActivity"; Now, in the onCreate function, you need to add these four lines. The first two are for the button to do something, the third and fourth are for the speech recognition. ImageButton speakButton = (ImageButton) findViewById(R.id.btn_speak); speakButton.setOnClickListener(this); sr = SpeechRecognizer.createSpeechRecognizer(this); sr.setRecognitionListener(new listener()); After the onCreate function you need to make a new class for the speech recognition. class listener implements RecognitionListener { public void onReadyForSpeech(Bundle params) {} public void onBeginningOfSpeech() {} public void onRmsChanged(float rmsdB) {} public void onBufferReceived(byte[] buffer) {} public void onEndOfSpeech() {} public void onError(int error) { if(error != 7) { Log.d(TAG, "error " + error); } } public void onResults(Bundle results) { String str = ""; // Create new empty string // Get the results from the speech recognizer ArrayList data = results.getStringArrayList(SpeechRecognizer.RESULTS_RECOGNITION); // If there is data if(data.size() != 0) { // Add all the data to a string for (int i = 0; i < data.size(); i++) { Log.d(TAG, "result " + data.get(i)); str += data.get(i); str += " "; } // Create a lowercase string str = str.toLowerCase(); // Send the GET request with message String message = "message=" + str; new Background().execute(message); } } public void onPartialResults(Bundle partialResults) { Log.d(TAG, "onPartialResults"); } public void onEvent(int eventType, Bundle params) { Log.d(TAG, "onEvent " + eventType); } } After this class you need to add a onClick function which activates when you press the button. public void onClick(View v) { if (v.getId() == R.id.btn_speak) { // Activate the speech listener Intent intent = new Intent(RecognizerIntent.ACTION_RECOGNIZE_SPEECH); intent.putExtra(RecognizerIntent.EXTRA_LANGUAGE_MODEL, RecognizerIntent.LANGUAGE_MODEL_FREE_FORM); intent.putExtra(RecognizerIntent.EXTRA_CALLING_PACKAGE, "voice.recognition.test"); intent.putExtra(RecognizerIntent.EXTRA_MAX_RESULTS, 5); sr.startListening(intent); } } The only thing we need to add now is the class which handles sending the GET requests. It's the same class as I used in my previous instructables. `/* This is a background process for connecting / / to the arduino server and sending / / the GET request with the added data / / / / !! INTERNET Permission !! / / / private class Background_get extends AsyncTask { @Override protected String doInBackground(String... params) { try { / Change the IP to the IP you set in the arduino sketch */ URL url = new URL(" " + params[0]); HttpURLConnection connection = (HttpURLConnection) url.openConnection(); BufferedReader in = new BufferedReader(new InputStreamReader(connection.getInputStream())); StringBuilder result = new StringBuilder(); String inputLine; while ((inputLine = in.readLine()) != null) result.append(inputLine).append("\n"); in.close(); connection.disconnect(); return result.toString(); } catch (IOException e) { e.printStackTrace(); } return null; } } This was the coding for the app. The only thing we need to do now is adding permissions to your app, so it can use the speech and the internet. Google Assistant can do a lot of things on our phones, but it's not so great at interacting with our Android apps. Sure you can ask Spotify to play a song or send a text with Telegram, but for the most part, apps and Assistant are mutually exclusive. That's no longer the case. As part of its Google Assistant Developer Day Thursday, Google has announced that a handful of "your favorite Android apps" have begun working with Assistant voice commands, including Discord, Etsy, MyFitnessPal, Mint, Nike Adapt, Postmates, Snapchat, Spotify, Twitter, and Walmart. As long as the corresponding app is set up on your phone, all you need to do is summon Assistant and ask to do something within an app, like ordering pizza on Postmates or checking an order status on Walmart. Google is calling the new feature App Actions, and they're similar to Alexa Actions. As Google describes, developers can create "natural and engaging experiences for users by mapping their users' intents to specific functionality within their apps." You'll be able to launch and search within apps, trigger app-specific commands, and create shortcuts for commonly used phrases. So instead of specifically asking Google Assistant to retrieve the news on Twitter, you can change it to respond to, "Hey Google, what's going on today?" Google says developers should be able to get their apps working with Google Assistant in less than a day and expects more developers to get on board in "the coming weeks." Assistant will also begin suggesting relevant Apps Actions even when the user doesn't ask for the app by name. So if you ask Assistant about Taylor Swift, for example, your phone will "highlight a suggestion chip that will guide the user to open up the search result in Twitter." In addition to the new functionality, Google also announced new English voices for Assistant that "take advantage of an improved prosody model to make Assistant sound more natural," as well as new educational experiences to augment at-home learning. Android Auto 2 (Image credit: Android Central) Some users are reporting an issue where Google Assistant refuses to respond to queries in Android Auto. Viewing your Google activity reveals that Assistant is hearing and understanding the commands, but it simply fails to respond. A community specialist has acknowledged the complaints on the Google support forums, but there has been no statement or update given on the status. Google created Assistant to make our lives easier, and over the years, it has spread to more and more devices to give us a helping hand. When it works, it can be life-changing. Unfortunately, Assistant doesn't always work, such as the recent case with Android Auto. Some users have been reporting that Assistant is failing to respond to queries, which is bad enough, but it gets even worse. That's because one user decided to check his Google history with myactivity.google.com and saw that Assistant is hearing and understanding the commands just fine, it is simply ignoring them. Source: Android Police (Image credit: Source: Android Police) If there's one thing worse than your Assistant mishearing you, it's when it just plain ignores you. There is already a growing thread on Google's support forum over the issue, and it has even been marked as a "duplicate of a trending issue." As far as trends go, this is not one to look forward to. Some users have reported a "double beep" which appears to be Assistant cutting itself off before it can reply, while others have experienced mixed results with Assistant only failing with specific requests (such as "Play the news"). Either way, it's not good, especially when you're in the car and your focus needs to be on your surroundings instead of fighting with Assistant. So far, there hasn't been any statement from Google, but a community specialist has acknowledged the complaint. Hopefully, that means Google is working on resolving the issue as quickly as possible.
